The Southern Alberta Institute of Technology (SAIT) acknowledges it is situated on the traditional territories of the Blackfoot Confederacy, which today encompasses the Indigenous people of the Treaty 7 region: the Siksika, the Piikani, the Kainai, the Tsuut'ina, the Stoney Nakoda, and the homeland of the Northwest Métis. SAIT also recognizes all Peoples who make their homes in the Treaty 7 region of southern Alberta.

“

Education is what got us into this mess – the use of education at least in terms of residential schools – but education is the key to reconciliation.”ⁱ

JUSTICE MURRAY SINCLAIR,
Chair of the Truth and Reconciliation
Commission of Canada

Executive summary

Repairing the relationship between Canada's Indigenous and non-Indigenous people is at the heart of reconciliation. The tragedy of colonization – the destruction of Indigenous cultures, languages and ways of life – has resulted in a Canada in which Indigenous Peoples are socially and economically disadvantaged and in which the ugliness of racism shapes their experience. The trauma experienced by Indigenous children in residential schools reverberates through the generations.

SAIT respectfully acknowledges it has much to learn on the path to reconciliation. Individually and collectively, we need to deepen and broaden our knowledge and understanding of the devastating impact of colonization. We need to turn a critical eye on our systems and processes to identify and alter those which stand in the way of access and success of Indigenous students. We need to reflect on what we teach and how we teach it to ensure that Indigenous truths and ways of knowing are honoured and respected. We need to broaden our perspectives – and in turn broaden the perspectives of our learners – so reconciliation is not a responsibility that lies with others, but a privilege embraced by each of us. As a leader in applied education, SAIT is committed to taking a leadership role in closing the education and employment gaps within our Indigenous communities.

This Indigenous Learner Success Strategy is a first step in our process of Indigenization and commits SAIT to taking action toward four strategic priorities:

ACCESS: Address low levels of post-secondary attainment and provide clear pathways into SAIT and other post-secondary programs.

SUCCESS: Enhance successful transition, retention and program completion, as well as labour market attachment, for Indigenous students.

AWARENESS: Increase faculty, staff and students' knowledge of Indigenous Peoples' cultures, histories, values and belief systems. Develop Indigenous curricula and new approaches to Indigenous teaching and learning support.

COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT: Build strong relationships with Indigenous communities, aligning with community development needs and improving access to education and training.

Glossary of termsⁱⁱ

In this document the terms Aboriginal, First Nations, Indian, Indigenous, Inuit and Métis are used in the Canadian context.

Aboriginal

Refers to the various Indian tribes indigenous to the Americas before contact with Europeans, or any persons descended from those first inhabitants. Indians, Inuit and Métis are identified as Aboriginal Peoples of Canada in the Constitution Act of 1982, Sec. 35(2).

First Nations

Refers to a politically autonomous band under The Indian Act, a nation of First Peoples.

Indian

Used to describe those who are defined as Indians within the meaning of the Indian Act.

Indigenous

Refers to all inhabitants indigenous to North America before contact with Euro-Canadians, and their descendants. Indigenous Peoples is a collective noun for First Nations, Inuit and Métis.

Inuit

A culturally distinct Indigenous people in northern Canada.

Métis

People born of or descended from both European and Indian parents. The Métis National Council defines Métis as “a person who self-identifies as Métis, is distinct from other Aboriginal Peoples, is of historic Métis Nations ancestry and who is accepted by the Métis Nation.”

The path to reconciliation

The colonization of North America's Indigenous communities, beginning with the arrival of European settlers in the 16th century, devastated Indigenous cultures and ways of life.

In order to gain access to Indigenous lands, the government negotiated Treaties with First Nations in some areas, or land was occupied or seized in others. First Nations were often relocated to isolated or economically unimportant locations.ⁱⁱⁱ

Some 150,000 Indigenous children were forced to attend residential schools and embrace the Christian faith. They were forbidden to speak their language and practise their spiritual beliefs, and were disciplined for doing so. As a result, many were emotionally, physically or sexually abused, and an estimated 3,200 children died while attending residential schools, with some estimates putting the number much higher.^{iv}

The Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement (IRSSA), the largest class action settlement in Canadian history, is an agreement between the federal government and approximately 86,000 survivors of the residential school experience. The agreement acknowledged the damage caused by residential schools and included education and compensation for former students. The IRSSA also included the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada (TRC).

In its final report, the TRC stated, "For over a century, the central goals of Canada's Aboriginal policy were to eliminate Aboriginal governments; ignore Aboriginal rights; terminate the Treaties; and, through a process of assimilation, cause Aboriginal peoples to cease to exist as distinct legal, social, cultural, religious, and racial entities in Canada. The establishment and operation of residential schools were a central element of this policy, which can best be described as cultural genocide."^v

"There is an emerging and compelling desire to put the events of the past behind us so that we can work towards a stronger and healthier future.

The truth and reconciliation process as part of the overall holistic and comprehensive response to the Indian Residential School legacy is a sincere indication and acknowledgement of the injustices and harms experienced by Aboriginal people and the need for continued healing. There is a profound commitment to establishing new relationships embedded in mutual recognition and respect that will forge a brighter future." (TRC Mandate)^{vi}

The TRC issued 94 Calls to Action to redress the legacy of the residential school system and to advance the process of reconciliation in Canada. The final report was released in December 2015 and the Government of Canada committed to implementing all 94 recommendations.

Nineteen of the Calls to Action have implications for post-secondary institutions, which have a significant role to play in closing Indigenous education and employment gaps and in furthering reconciliation through education about Indigenous history and the legacy of residential schools.

Find out more about the TRC by visiting trc.ca.

Gaps in education and employment

Indigenous people in Canada have a lower rate of employment and are less likely to attain post-secondary education than non-Indigenous people. Statistics Canada's 2011 National Household Survey shows an employment rate of 63% among Aboriginal people of core working age (aged 25 to 64) with a comparable rate of 76% for non-Aboriginal people.^{vii}

The same survey reported that 48% of Aboriginal people aged 25 to 64 had a post-secondary qualification in 2011, compared to 65% of the non-Aboriginal population.^{viii}

The most significant difference was related to university graduates: 10% of Aboriginal people had a university degree, compared to 26% of non-Aboriginals. Additionally, 29% of Aboriginal people had no certificate, diploma or degree, compared to 12% for non-Aboriginal people in the same age group.^{ix}

Post-secondary education is key to closing the employment gap. The employment gap of 13 percentage points that exists between Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal people shrinks to five for those with a high school diploma and a post-secondary certificate, diploma or degree.^x

The Centre for the Study of Living Standards, in its 2015 report Closing the Aboriginal Education Gap in Canada: Assessing Progress and Estimating the Economic Benefits, estimates closing the educational attainment gap for Aboriginal Canadians by 2031 would boost Aboriginal employment by 90,000 workers and would cumulatively increase Canadian Gross Domestic Product (GDP) by $261 billion. It further estimates closing the educational attainment gap would boost Aboriginal average employment income by as much as $11,200.^{xi}

BEHIND THE EDUCATION GAP

In 2018, Indspire – an Indigenous-led registered charity that invests in the education of Indigenous people – conducted a scan of the experiences of Indigenous learners in higher education.

Indigenous learners often pointed to three areas of concern: limited funding, racism, and issues with feeling isolated and unsupported.

The Indspire report recommended post-secondary institutions increase funding frameworks for Indigenous support services, and strengthen Indigenous culture, identity and belonging through mentorship on campus and beyond. The report further recommends ongoing monitoring and evaluation of implementation of the TRC Calls to Action in post-secondary institutions.^{xii}

Indigenization at SAIT

Leaders of Canadian post-secondary institutions must prepare for the reconciliation process. We recognize that we must respect the localized ways in which proposed transformations are imagined and articulated: there is more than one way to achieve an Indigenized institution.

University of Alberta researchers Adam Gaudry and Danielle Lorenz describe three distinct approaches to Indigenization:

Indigenous inclusion in higher education is about equity and focuses on the recruitment and retention of Indigenous learners, staff, instructors and administrators. It often results in support services directed toward Indigenous learners, such as Aboriginal student orientations, Aboriginal student centres, learning supports and financial aid.

Reconciliation Indigenization is about power-sharing within the institution and offering curricula that broadens understanding of Indigenous peoples and experiences such as forced dependency, persistent poverty, residential schools, child welfare systems and land development.

Decolonial Indigenization requires restructuring the organization in a way that puts Indigenous people in clear control, instituting a treaty-based model of governance and practice and supporting a resurgence in Indigenous culture, politics, knowledge and on-the-land skills.^{xiii}

SAIT is intensifying its efforts to close Indigenous educational and employment gaps through a process of Indigenous inclusion. This work will both introduce new programming and build on earlier initiatives, such as:

- establishing the Chinook Lodge Resource Centre. Opened in 2001, the lodge is responsible for the recruitment and retention of Indigenous students. A warm, welcoming and ethical space offering spiritual teachings and practices, the lodge gives Indigenous students a sense of congruence and ownership – a place where they belong
- partnering with other institutions to create pathways through basic adult education for Indigenous students
- piloting a non-credit Certificate of Achievement in Pipeline Operations with 60 Indigenous students
- working with First Nations to provide customized skills-based training tied to economic development plans
- offering customized training programs to unemployed Indigenous youth
- developing a course in English literacy and communications at the Grade 10 level, with a focus on Indigenous content
- developing a math course aimed specifically at helping Indigenous students meet admissions requirements for SAIT upgrading programs
- offering summer camps for Indigenous junior high students
- piloting an Indigenous dual-credit offering.

SAIT's Indigenous Learner Success Strategy is the next step of a long and important journey.

Alignment with institutional plans

The Indigenous Learner Success Strategy works in alignment with other institutional plans:

- the Comprehensive Institutional Plan (2018–2021)
- SAIT’s institutional strategic plan Think Big. Think Applied Education (2015–2020)
- SAIT’s education plan Big Thinking, Applied (2017–2020)

COMPREHENSIVE INSTITUTIONAL PLAN (2018–2021)

SAIT supports the Government of Alberta’s overall goals for the adult-learning system of accessibility, affordability, quality, coordination and accountability. SAIT’s Comprehensive Institutional Plan articulates a specific accessibility priority initiative: increase recruitment, retention and graduation of Indigenous students. The Indigenous Learner Success Strategy gives voice to this priority.

THINK BIG. THINK APPLIED EDUCATION (2015–2020)

SAIT’s strategic plan guides our collective work. Think Big, Think Applied Education identifies five strategic priorities: student success, sustainable growth, employee success, applied education innovation and partnerships. The student success priority commits SAIT to enhancing Indigenization efforts by increasing opportunities for students from under-represented groups to excel at SAIT.

BIG THINKING, APPLIED (2017–2020)

The education plan guides academic work at SAIT and identifies five key areas that support student success: student-first culture, engaging students, effective teaching methods, focused applied education programs and relationships. Two key areas are aimed at enhancing the experience of Indigenous students.

- Engaging students: Create an inclusive learning community that recognizes students’ diverse learning needs and improves success by providing services when and where they are needed.
- Focused applied education programs: Deliver inclusive learning experiences that meet the needs of our diverse student population.

Development of this strategy

In February 2017, SAIT hired an Indigenous consultant to start the process of Indigenization. A task team was established with the consultant acting as chair and with the following membership: two Indigenous Elders, a Métis scholar from the University of Calgary, an Indigenous scholar from Mount Royal University, an Indigenous representative from industry, staff from Chinook Lodge Resource Centre, and leadership representation from Learner Success Services, Student Experience and Employee Services. The task team's mandate was to identify SAIT's Indigenization process.

In June 2018, the new coordinator for the Chinook Lodge Resource Center was given the responsibility of developing SAIT's Indigenous Learner Success Strategy. A new committee that includes members of surrounding Indigenous communities was formed, and numerous conversations took place with community representatives, Elders, faculty and staff. The committee also reviewed recent surveys and focus groups with Indigenous students. The review and those discussions revealed strong and continued support for the commitments identified by the original committee.

The Indigenization committees and various stakeholders confirm the following Indigenization commitments:

- nurture Indigenous student success
- increase the presence of Indigenous culture on the SAIT campus and acknowledge and raise awareness of the history of the land on which SAIT is situated
- build mutually beneficial relationships with Indigenous communities aimed at increasing enrolments and improving the graduation and employment outcomes of SAIT's Indigenous student population
- provide sustainable opportunities to learn more about Indigenous issues and develop curriculum that is critically reflective of Indigenous history, cultures and perspectives

The Indigenous Learner Success Strategy is framed on the medicine wheel, an important element of many Indigenous cultures. While the significance and use of the medicine wheel varies within cultures, there are common elements: the circle represents continuity, the equidistant points identify east, south, west and north and the four quadrants illustrate the interconnectedness of an individual's emotional, mental, spiritual and physical self. Many scholars view the medicine wheel as a guide for any journey.

In response to the teachings of the medicine wheel and to support a holistic Indigenous approach, academic and non-academic supports presented in this Indigenous Learner Success Strategy are designed to meet the emotional, mental, spiritual and physical needs of Indigenous learners.

A stone archway is the central focus of the image. The arch is constructed from several large, rough-hewn stones. The top stone is a smaller, roughly rectangular block. The archway is set against a background that transitions from a deep red at the top to a dark blue at the bottom. The lighting is dramatic, highlighting the textures of the stones.

Indigenous students are at the center of our strategy. We prioritize the mind, body, spirit and emotional development of each of our learners. With learner development in mind, we identified four strategic priorities in the areas of access, success, awareness and community engagement.

Strategic priorities, expected outcomes and actions
